

This is in regard to the Do Not Call List. I signed up for this because if I want to do business with an organization I will call them – they do not need to repeatedly contact me on a daily, weekly, monthly basis. I have teenage children that drive and I would much rather have my telephone line available for important phone calls. What right does a company/organization have that they can choose when and how to contact the consumer. Doesn't the consumer have the right to decide when and who they want to do business with? After all it's the consumer's money, right?
